ABOUT THE PRESENTERS

Esteban Corrales is a technical solutions executive for Autodesk Construction Solutions. A 12-year veteran of construction management, Esteban strives to innovate and improve quality, productivity and efficiency in the design and construction industry. At Autodesk, he works closely with customers to understand their businesses, needs and roadblocks, and to identify the tools that can help them remove the roadblocks and improve their processes and business outcomes.

Cory Davis, founder of Real Time Risk Solutions, has extensive experience managing public and private construction projects throughout North America. The RTRS platform, recommended by insurance companies, provides an easy way for construction companies to manage risk by digitizing all aspects of safety management—from toolbox talks through actionable behavior-based observations—with advanced analytics providing a digital archive of all project safety activities, including subcontractor documentation, in real time.

Peter Grant is founder and CEO of Safesite, a safety management app and reporting dashboard that helps companies make measurable improvements. His experience working as a civil engineer in project management for large commercial contractors motivated him to use mobile technology to reduce preventable incidents and deaths. That goal has driven Grant's strategic decisions for Safesite, which has grown into a robust safety management system. Read his safety insights on the Safesite blog.

Chris Jervey is the director of business development at StructionSite, which partners with many of the country's largest builders, construction technology providers, AEC industry organizations, and academic/training institutions. Jervey has 25 years of experience working in construction project management, sales and business development, and focuses on tools in the construction industry that create workflow efficiency and make complex work a little easier.
